WATER

I have come one billion years through the vermillion and nightshade sea of pressureless fire; made my passage over suspended walkways of floating noiseless dreams; deep-water treading to find this white sail ship on the sea, and everywhere I sensed quiet disturbing presence the sea-ferns blowing in the depths

Disturbing births and entrances and entranced with sticks and stones and diadems and salten letters on the sea everywhere the blessings in the eyes of fish; sea-pens in the world's inverted Greek dish the fields on Salisbury Plain shift to conceive again the rain, then swelled the touchstones murmur; then In evening the water-moon plunders a small pond as waves reach the cool she-beach floating with new-blown light.

Dreams come to the sleeping forest in never-never land in nests of small birds' memories Chestnuts dropping or growing in plant-wishes in green sleeping seeds in a small wind or earth-burden silent musical note

The sacks of dust walk barking to the skied mirror of night barking to their ways of knowing and all that is knowing around them the dust is green and passes Memories linger in green in passing a ripple is sent to a far-away galaxie a dead cathedral in space.

the wet mist of the new sea-breeze drops off the white sail's tip into Memory thoughts, things, tread on the still skeleton of the universe an abacus, gravity, or a letter is dropped upwardly in the bowl of the world, holding memories, thoughts, as water.
